Greene County African American Museum

1415 Northeast Street
Greensboro, GA 30642

A Labor of Love

On October 16th, 2021, the Greene County African American Museum (GCAAM) opened its doors to tell the untold stories of African-Americans from Greene County.

This would not have been possible without the unceasing work of the museum's founder and director, Mamie Hillman. Since its opening, GCAAM has grown tremendously and has seen great success.

Our Vision & Mission

The Greene County African American Museum is dedicated to the empowerment of and truth-telling about African American lives in Greene County, Georgia.

The Museum is designed to inspire a clarity of heart and mind by sharing with all the important contributions and stories of Greene County's African American community throughout its history to the present day.

Do you have a unique project idea or want to volunteer?

Get Involved

The Greene County African American Museum sponsors and organizes community events both at the Museum, in the schools, and throughout the County. Contact us for more information.

Our Impact

→ The Museum

The Museum's galleries are committed to different periods in African American life in Greene County, with one additional gallery dedicated to a featured aspect of Greene County African American life, such as education, health care, or art and culture.

→ Community Outreach

Among many other events, the Museum hosts an annual City Worker Appreciation Luncheon and Health Fair as a way to bring the Greensboro community together and foster unity.

→ Civic Engagement

We are proud to have initiated the call for honor and recognition of the legacy of the "Original 33" who were elected to Georgia State office in 1868, but expelled for being African-American. After a successful candle vigil and dinner in September, 2023, we will continue tell their story and the stories of so many other civic leaders.
